Meet Our Judge Tina Fuentes

TINA FUENTES ARTIST STATEMENT

For thirty years now I have realized my art in drawings, paintings and prints and have found the exploration of the various techniques to be rewarding. Beyond the advancement of my technical skills, I have been rewarded in seeing my inner thoughts and energies come to fruition in two-dimensional form.

Throughout my artistic explorations, I have consistently used the human form. The figures have gone through several transformations. They have been literally stated; they have been hidden in shadows. At times, they have been defined by delicate sensuous, linear qualities that intrigue the viewer. At other times, the figures have taken on more ominous qualities, becoming dark, foreboding, and mysterious forms. Within the 1990's, another transformation occurred in my exploration of the human form. My exploration turned to an examination of the female form in connection to the symbol of the "cross." The "Female & Cross" metaphor surfaced in my art as a metaphor for the feminine strength and power. In order to facilitate my exploration of the theme, I constructed an eight-foot cross and used it in conjunction with a live model. Revealed in three dimensions, the model and cross-helped me to realize the potential for reinterpretation of a symbol traditionally lined to a male figure.

As part of this ongoing development of the theme, I investigated the metaphor outside of the confines of my studio. Upon traveling to Highland Chiapas to the city of San Cristobal de las Casas I visited the villages of Chamula and Romerillo to view their mountain crosses. These immense crosses are viewed to be manifestations of both god and creator ancestors. At times they are being either or both genders. My goal was to travel as both an artist and observer -- to explore and to try to understand the fusion of ancestor, god, man and woman that these crosses represent to the Maya. With the notes, drawings and photos from the trip's, consolidated and studied, I continued to work on the cross image with what I believe has been an even fuller sense of its potential meaning.

As the work has evolved, I have had the opportunity to expand my research beyond the two-dimensional format. In 1998-2009 I was able to expand my studio medium into the word of film via computer. Introduction and involvement of this technology has begun to provide a viable dialogue for my images. Thus, a reshaping of the visual growth continues to unfold.

Over the years, my works embraced and integrated illusions of space inspired by land/space that exists here in the Plains of New Mexico and West Texas. These artistic engagements with issues of geographical/atmospheric phenomena have led to a broadening interest in the vastness of the arid spaces of the desert corridor that extends beyond the boundaries of these lands. These explorations have taken me to the Mexican Chihuahua Desert, the Sierra Madre Occidental and Sonora Desert in the Tucson, Arizona region. Taking my drawing tools, camera and movie projector to these locations to document vast spaces enabled me to return to my studio with ideas and images that have filtered into the visual interpretations. As I continue this discourse, I draw upon the dynamics one may encounter in these aerial landscapes. Thunderous clouds that one can feel a reverence for, a natural force that can mesmerize and bring forth trepidations all at the same time. Nature, a beautiful energy, can also be a diabolical force.
